ALBUQUERQUE.....NEW MEXICO

TUESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 7, 1905.

Eighth Victim of the Gang

SINCE it is generally understood that Mr. Andrews dominates the republican central committee—which is to meet in Santa Fe on Friday of this week—the following extract from that staunch old republican paper, the Philadelphia North American, will be of interest to the republicans of New Mexico, inasmuch as it shows them the manner of man who is managing their party affairs. The gentlemen of the committee know that they ought to adopt a resolution asking Mr. Andrews to resign because of the disgrace which his conduct has brought upon the territory, but they will probably not do anything of the sort because Mr. Andrews would not approve of it. On the other hand, however, they will take such action as they may deem most effective in opposition to joint statehood; because the defeat of statehood is one of Mr. Andrews' schemes, and the committee has been called together for the purpose of rendering all the aid it can in that line. Let the republicans of New Mexico keep these facts in mind, and then let them read the following from the North American:

"Clark, the unhappy victim of the Gang's system of handling public money, is the eighth man whose life has been destroyed by that system.

"To the author of the system, Matthew S. Quay, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with the warm approval of Governor Pennypacker, is about to erect a statue at the cost of $20,000! Around the base should be grouped, if justice could have her own, the prostrate figures of the three suicides and of the five men who died of broken hearts or of shame, because of the application of the ideas of Quay and Penrose and Andrews to the conduct of the state treasury.

"There is no fear of the verdict that the people of the state will give upon these later financial operations of the Gang. The precise personal relation of Penrose to the Enterprise bank is yet to be determined; we have only the facts about his transactions with the state money in the little bank at Turtle Creek; but Andrews, Penrose's old partner, seems to have bagged and lost not less than $100,000 of the state's deposit; and State Treasurer Mathews, the loyal servant of the Gang, on the last day tossed in $50,000 more of the people's money in an effort to avert the catastrophe!

"This much is certain. There is also no doubt, whatever, that this wrecked bank was levied upon for contributions for the Gang campaign. Not unlikely some of this money has been expended for newspaper and sign-board advertising in abuse of Mayor Weaver and the City party.

"For this exposure of crime and this headlong plunge of still another of the Gang's cashiers to ignominious and awful death inevitably seals the doom of the Penrose-Durham candidate for the state treasurer, J. Leo Plummer, and assures the election of the reform candidate.

"If it does not, then it will be useless for anybody to contend that the people of the state of Pennsylvania are fit for self-government.

"There is no longer any issue before the people of the state but that between Rascality and Righteousness. The tariff, sound money, our foreign policy, even the railroad question, are all thrust aside; and before six million honest Pennsylvanians is placed this one inquiry:

"Are you willing to permit thieves to control your public business and to steal your money?"

"The Gang in Philadelphia has plundered the city. The Gang at Harrisburg has plundered the state. No ingenuity of falsehood and evasion can separate Andrews from Penrose, or Mathews from Penrose and Durham, or all of them from the Gang and from the plundered bank and the vast deposit there of state funds.

"The system in state and city is one system; the thieves belong to one band; they were organized and drilled by one master, Quay; their hands are deep in all the filthiness of corruption that surrounds the business of manipulating the public money.

"Ten million dollars balance! Why such a vast sum hoarded, while the school teachers cannot get their salaries! But are there, indeed, ten millions in the treasury? We shall know before another year has passed, unless the people of the state have bid farewell to the requirements of self-preservation.

"Even the members of the Gang realize that for them the game is up. It must have been a frightful shock to the respectable citizens who honored the rascals with their presence at the meeting on Wednesday night to hear the news from Allegheny as they came out of the door of the Academy.

"But imagine what were the feelings of Penrose, as he faced the audience, with his speech in his pocket, full of eulogy for the state treasurers of the past and the present, and knowing that the wires were busy with exposures of another piece of brigandage and with news of the self-murder of another unhappy wretch caught in the coils of his Organization!

"The enemies of a free press often accuse it, as it was accused at the meeting on Wednesday night, of violent exaggeration and misrepresentation of the deeds of the politicians and the dishonest financiers. But when we look at the revelations that have been made in New York respecting the stupendous crimes perpetrated by the officers of the life insurance companies, at the proposed theft and sale of the Philadelphia gas works, and at the naked facts connecting politicians and public funds with the wrecking of the Enterprise bank and the suicide of the cashier, what reason is there for exaggeration? The worst—the very worst—thing ever said of any of these politicians and financial crooks falls far short of the truth as it is now known and demonstrated by the movement of events."

Manchuria Recovering

THE battlefields of the greatest conflict of modern times have already, within a few months of their bloody baptism, been turned back to the pursuits of peace. Almost before the echo of the cannon's roar had died away the Manchurian farmer crept along in the wake of the advancing Japanese and, wasting no time in tears over his mangled fields and crops, began raising things again.

By the end of August, says a correspondent of the London Times, writing from Mukden, the country was a great garden. Even before the treaty of peace was signed the stimulating character of the Japanese occupation was unmistakable. Manchuria under Japanese protection is a very different land from what it was when a Russian outpost.

The damage done by the war is not as severe as might have been expected. Many villages were injured, but, strange to say, cities like Liao-Yang and Mukden remain almost untouched. Although Mukden was for days the center around which one of the fiercest battles of modern times was fought, it escaped serious harm, largely through the forbearance of the Japanese.

THIS, from the Los Angeles Times, fits Albuquerque throughout the whole day just as well as it fits Los Angeles during that portion of the day after the fog has lifted: "This is an ancient pueblo, and we are growing big and used to things, but we have not yet outgrown the delight of watching an expatriated easterner standing in our sunshine on a November day, wondering if it can all be true."

NOW that the football season has begun we don't miss the war as much as we did.—New York Mail.

Solos

There is much speculation as to how much of his mother's coin the Yellow Kid has spent in his New York campaign.

Anent "printing the news" the Twilight Squeak says "you don't have to lie about it." It's interesting to know that the Citizen's action has not been compulsory.

Yesterday the news reached this country that a Frenchman has discovered that pouring milk around watermelons will make them grow twice as big. The coons are having a jubilee.

News has been received from headquarters in New York City which makes it moral certain that each one of the three candidates for mayor has already won, and the election is a mere formality.

The Canadian government now wants the waters of Niagara falls diverted northward. They are running off a lot of the water in tubes to run dynamos, and next thing somebody'll have a scheme to run the water backward over the falls.

Kelly, the keeper of the Kansas till, has made the statement that he will exact "complete personal satisfaction" from the editor of the Topeka State Journal when he meets him again. Probably MacLennan will arrange to see Mr. Kelly first hereafter.

"Goldurn," says an Arkansas paper in rather large type. This looks a little startling at first, but further investigation reveals the fact that the article is about a "gold urn" full of money which someone dug up. The festive title adds much to the gaiety of nations.

Card of Thanks.
"We wish to most sincerely thank our many friends and fellow citizens in this city for their many tokens of kindness and loving sympathy tendered to us in the time of our deep bereavement in the death of the late Christopher Columbus."

"SLAVIO VIGIL."
"THE EVENING CITIZEN."

(Lost in the shuffle when the Citizen locked up its forms yesterday.)
Bulletin.—(4:30 p. m.) This paper takes pleasure in exclusively announcing to the public one of the most sensational discoveries ever made by modern science. The Citizen has it on the highest authority from a gentleman who for obvious reasons wishes his name withheld, that there no longer is any doubt that the earth is round. The Citizen has been in possession of a rumor to this effect for some days past but has now obtained positive and official confirmation of the story. The greatest excitement will be caused by the Citizen's special announcement.

THE SOUTHWESTERN PRESS

Only Natural.

The Santa Fe New Mexican has made several stabs this week in an effort to defend "Bull" Andrews. But then that is only natural.—Springer Stockman.

Improved Vision.
In spite of his optical infirmity, Col. Max Frost, of the New Mexican, appears to have seen things at Washington which he has heretofore alleged did not exist.—Roswell Record.

How Perfectly Shocking.
It is currently reported that a number of saloons are running in this county in localities that have less than a hundred inhabitants. This is in direct violation of territorial statute, which makes not only the saloon man, but the official who issues the license, subject to a heavy fine. The matter should be thoroughly and promptly investigated.—Las Vegas Optic.

THE WOMEN OF CHINA.

(Paul Stuart Hunter, in The Pilgrim for November.)

The women of China are not educated, as a general rule, in books or literature, though they are trained in practical tasks, such as dressmaking, housekeeping and attention to their religious duties. This last in China coming under the category named, Girls, however, learn the "Nu Erh Ching," or Classic for Girls. This is full of wise precepts laid down for their guidance in their different human relationships, as well as their duties to the gods. Professor Headland, of Pekin, has translated this into English. A few extracts will show the purport of it.

"You should rise from bed as early in the morning as the east is peeped.

Nor retire at evening's closing till your work is wholly done.

Don't say 'Father's sister's ugly, But mother's sister's good.'

Thou' your neighbors thus discuss them, You must surely never shout;

And as long as you're a maiden, you at home should always stay.

And be very careful of whatever you may say."

As a wife, some of her duties are enumerated in similar strain:

"As a wife to husband's parents, You should fill be and good.

Nor should suffer imperfection in their clothing or their food.

Be submissive to their orders, all their wants anticipate,

That, because his wife is idle, they your husband may not hate.

Be submissive to your husband, Nor his wishes e'er neglect.

First of all in this submission is his parents to respect.

Economical and active you should ever strive to be.

Nor complain that Chang has nothing, and that few are poor as Li."

After the duties of a wife come those of a mother, in which the woman is urged to train the child well, to be forbearing with it, but not to spoil it by overindulgence.
